Amsphere sponsors

The Quality Advocate 2008 Award

Amsphere will be sponsoring the Quality Advocate Award 2008 at the SQC, Software and Systems Quality conference held on the 29th-30th September at the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre, London.

The award is for the person who deserves recognition for outstanding performance in the field of software testing and quality assurance and is able to demonstrate most successfully, out of all the candidates, that they have:

1. Delivered the required quality software solutions by reducing the time and cost to test or time to market, or
2. Creatively added value to solutions by assuring quality throughout the life cycle and maximising quality with testing techniques and practices, or
3. Adapted the approach to quality management and test management with strategies, tactics and the pragmatic use of tools.

“We are proud to be the sponsors of this award,” commented Ricky Shankar CEO Amsphere. “Software quality is an issue that business needs to take seriously and that the testing community needs to promote. Awards such as this help put a spotlight on those who excel at doing exactly this and highlight the importance of reducing business risk through testing.”

Last year the prize was awarded to Danny Dore of Boots for successfully adapting an innovative approach to testing that encompassed; cost reductions, improved quality of live systems and tightened quality control over deliverables from several vendors.

This year there is a prize of £1,000 for the successful candidate and a Wii games console for the person who nominates the winner. If you would like to nominate someone, the link can be found at www.sqs-conferences.com/uk/ Nominations are open until the 12th September.
